

I have been informed that the FCC is considering a new, LPFM service that could disrupt certain FM translator services. Living out here in the middle of nowhere in Crescent City, CA for the past several decades, I can assure you that without translators, our radio mix would take on an entirely different feel. I often spend my weekends in the garage, working on various projects. While I work, I mostly listen to K-LOVE and enjoy the programming it offers. It is available to me only via a translator service.

I don't have to worry about what my children might hear if they happen to be working with me when I listen to K-LOVE. That certainly can not be said for many other stations. I think we have enough rock/rap/golden oldies/ stations to service the public good without disrupting the K-LOVE service, which is unique to this area. You will almost certainly agree that wholesome programming like K-LOVE offers better serves the greater public good than many other options.

I urge you to consider the greater good and keep translator services available to rural communities like this.
